Molded of earthenware, this petite sculpture is a type of centuries-old burial figurine known as míngqì. Such model figures were placed in tombs of individuals with high status to ensure a safe journey to the afterlife. Meant to depict the pleasures of daily life, common burial figures were warriors, dancers, male and female figures and animals. This míngqì is of a male attendant dressed in a bright yellow gown, hands folded in front and topped by a towering headdress.

PAGODA RED

YELLOW GLAZED MINGQI SPIRIT SCHOLAR

Though some of the glaze has now weathered from age, revealing the original ceramic form, the facial features are left intact with stunning detail.
