This late 19th-century storage coffer balances a streamlined silhouette with textured, wabi-sabi materials. Created in the style of Mongolian trunks, the two-door sideboard was originally configured to open from the top and has been modified with front-facing doors that open to a continuous interior with a single shelf. A scalloped apron encloses each door, carved with a simple botanical motif and affixed with iron door pulls. Ideal today as a sideboard or credenza, the square corner cabinet has a soft, timeworn finish with light brown color and an aged patina.
